SEGUNDA PARTE

I. TRANSLATION

Translate the following text into Spanish.

ELECTRIC CARS AND THE FUTURE OF THE US CAR INDUSTRY

Car prices in the United States have increased sharply in recent years. At the same time, electric vehicles are becoming cheaper in many parts of the world, especially because of strong competition from China. This situation has raised an important question: could the United States fall behind in the global electric car market?

A new American company called Slate Auto has recently presented an electric pick-up truck. The company is supported by Jeff Bezos, and its new vehicle has a starting price of $24,950. This is low compared with the average price of a new car in the US, which is now close to $48,000. However, in China some electric cars can be bought for around $10,000.

Chinese electric vehicles are already gaining ground in other markets. In the United Kingdom, a significant number of new cars sold recently were made in China. Chinese cars are also becoming more common in the European Union, although tariffs have been introduced. In the United States, however, Chinese cars cannot currently be sold.

One difficulty for American manufacturers is consumer preference. Many US buyers prefer large vehicles with modern technology and extra comfort. As a result, companies often produce bigger and more expensive cars. In contrast, many buyers in China and Europe are more willing to accept smaller and more practical vehicles.

The Slate truck is simple. It has two seats, manual windows, no sound system, and a phone holder instead of a navigation screen. It can travel about 205 miles on one charge. Extra features are available, but they increase the final price.

Some experts believe that many Americans may not want such a basic car. However, supporters of electric vehicles argue that cheaper models are necessary if the United States wants to compete with China in this important industry.
